

Being in a communications course full of ENFP kids, I thought I would be able to find my people immediately. Many people found their comfort friends during orientation. But even after orientation, I was all alone.

I was afraid of being seen alone on campus, I was afraid of how others would see me and I was afraid that I would have no friends.

So, I joined a group that had the same timetable as me. But, we were very different. Even though I was physically with them, I was never a part of them.

This exacerbated the loneliness I was feeling in hall. Staying on campus, I thought that my social life would be bustling just like I had seen on Instagram and TikTok. Supper hangouts, celebrating birthdays, hanging out till the wee hours of the night... that was what I had looked forward to.

But I grew disillusioned very quickly. There were many “mouse moments” in hall when I was alone and crying out to God, asking why I was alone and why I couldn’t fit in. I questioned God’s goodness. How was He the Cornerstone of my life if I was in so much pain?
