

In the past, I used to think that if I accepted Jesus as my Lord and Saviour and got baptised, I would have a problem-free life.

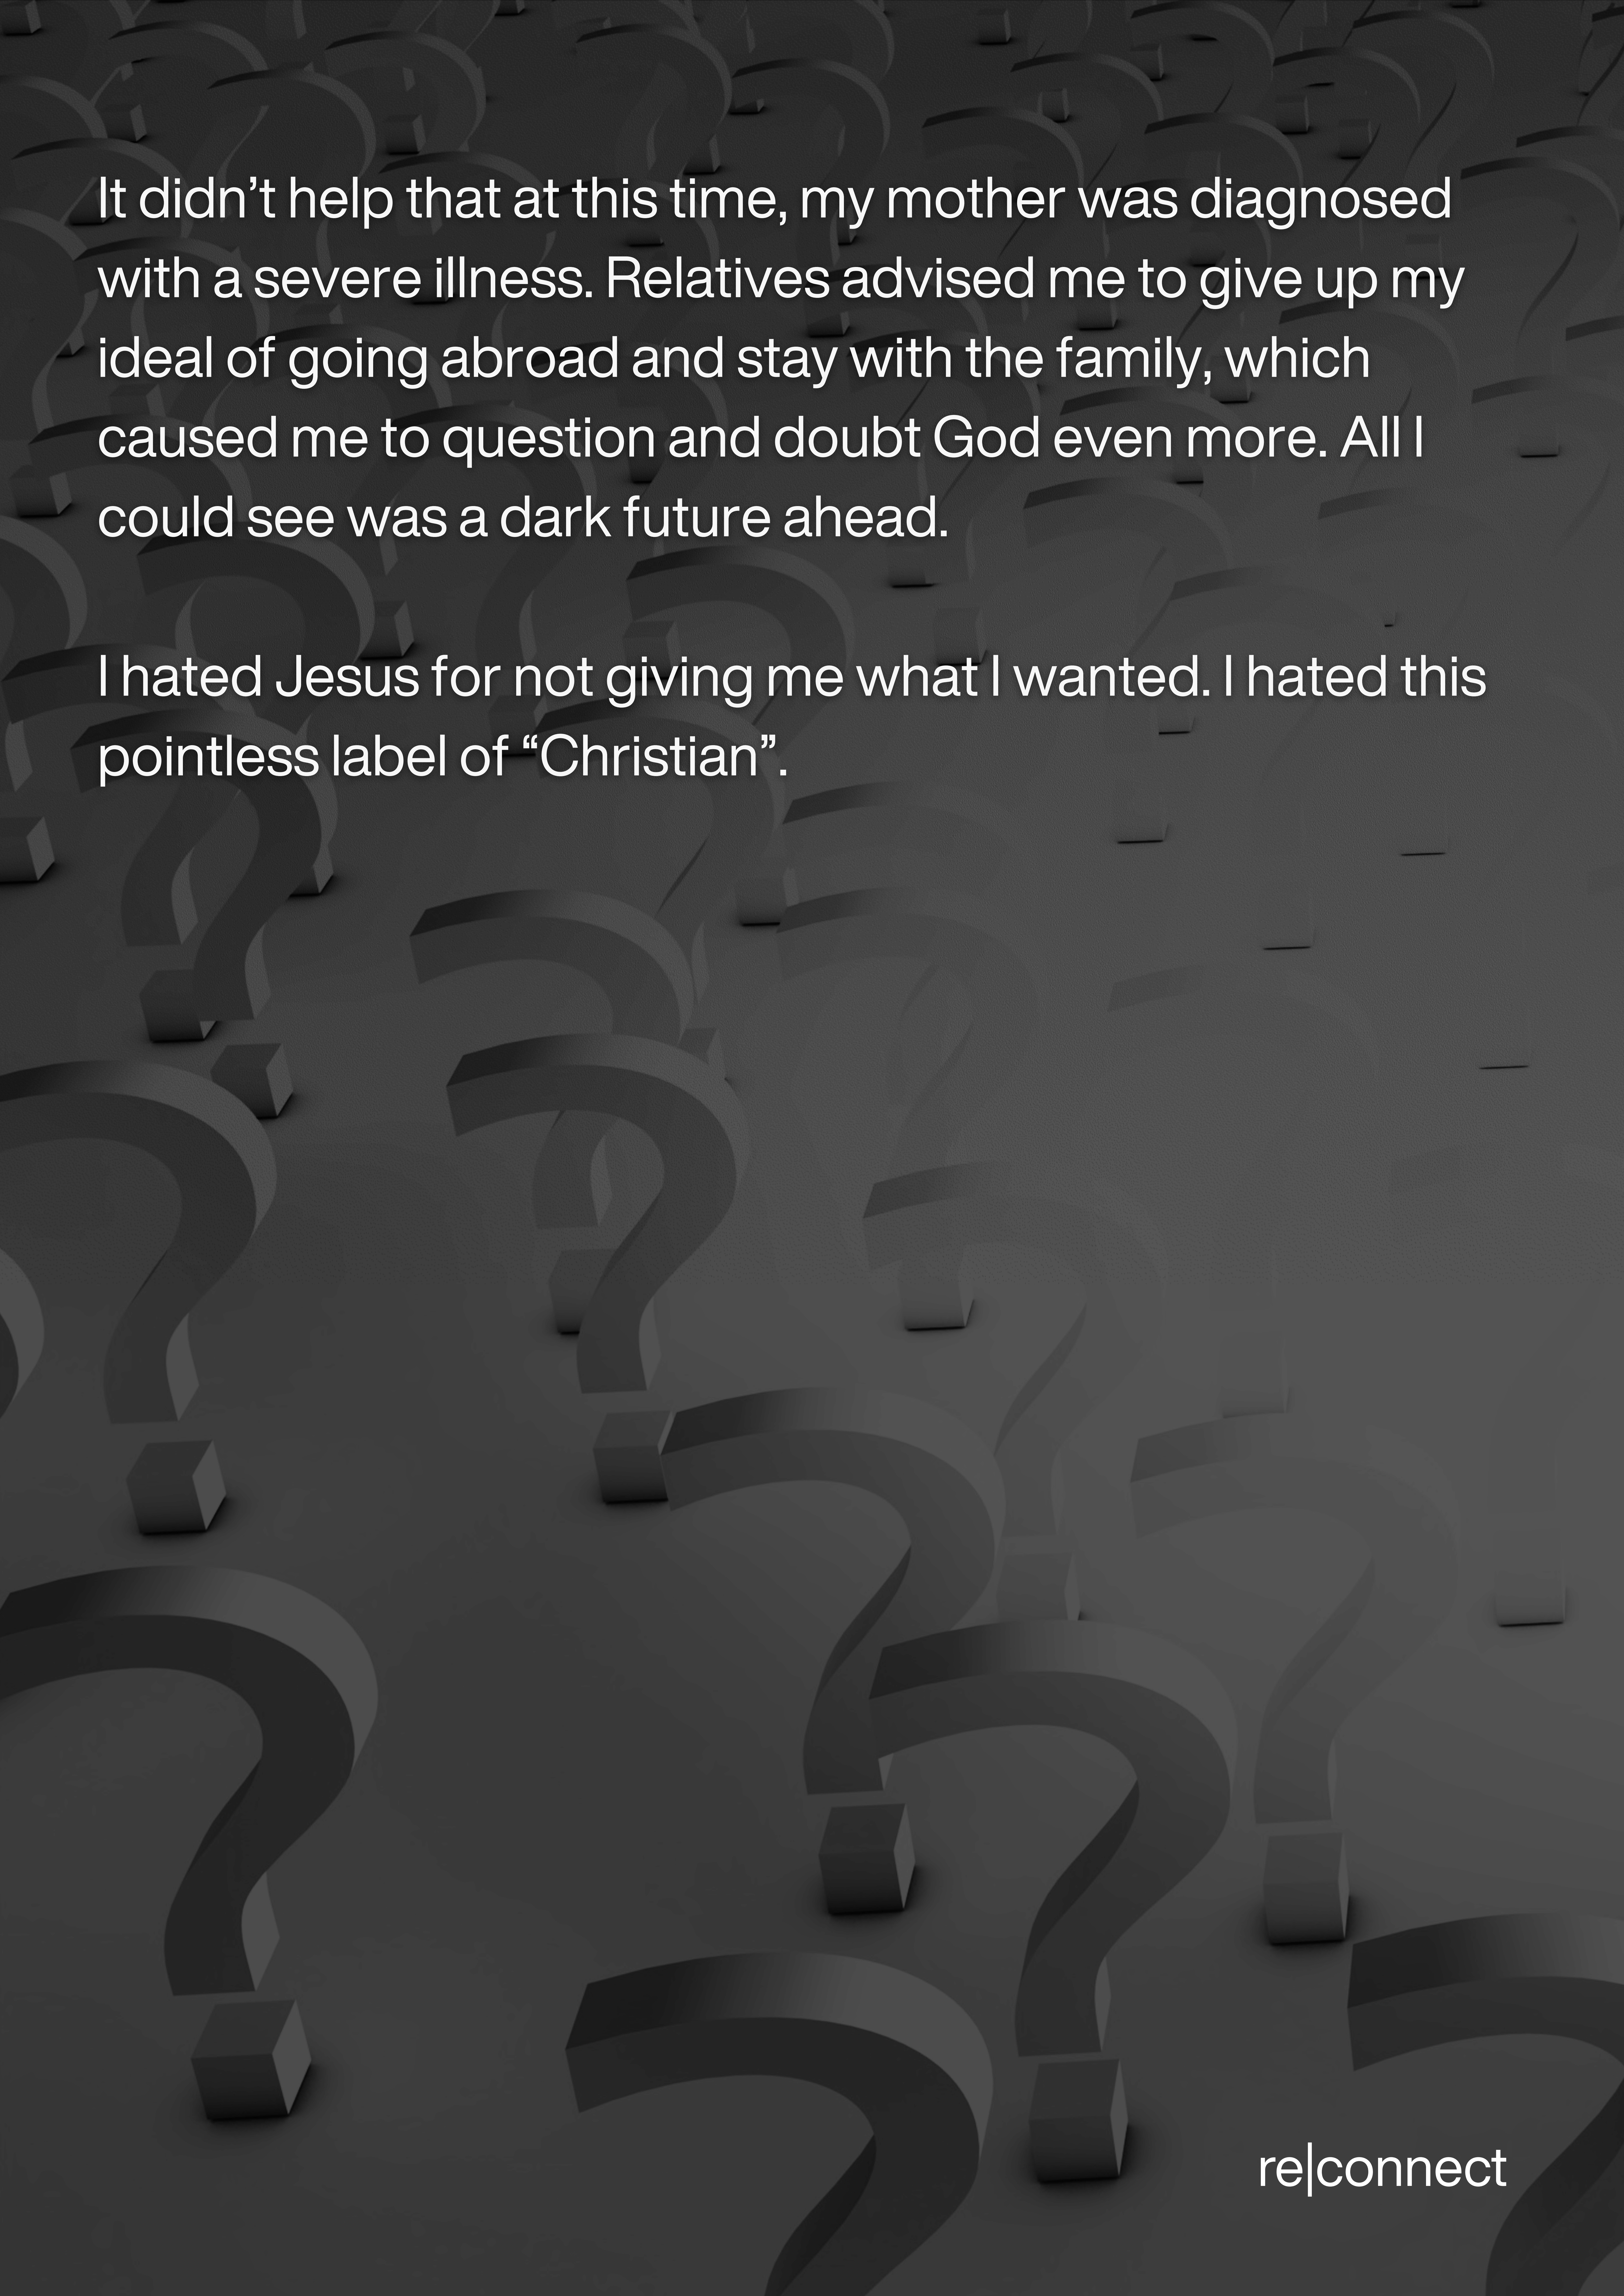

So when the problems and failures started cropping up, I blamed Jesus. Maybe it was better not to be Christian at all, since it wasn't making my life better as I had expected. In fact, my non-Christian friends were having a way more smooth and successful life compared to me!

What I wanted most then was to get a scholarship and study overseas. I thought that this would guarantee a bright future, make it easy to get a good job, plus, a scholarship holder would be seen as smart.

So I put in the time and effort, self-studying, going for tuition classes... but the chance eluded me no matter how many times I tried. Why didn't God fulfill my dream? What about my future now?

This was all His fault.

The background of the entire image is a dark gray field filled with numerous 3D question marks. These question marks are rendered in a lighter gray color and are scattered across the frame, creating a sense of depth and repetition. They vary in size and orientation, some appearing to stand upright while others are slightly tilted. The lighting creates soft shadows beneath the question marks, giving them a three-dimensional appearance.

It didn't help that at this time, my mother was diagnosed with a severe illness. Relatives advised me to give up my ideal of going abroad and stay with the family, which caused me to question and doubt God even more. All I could see was a dark future ahead.

I hated Jesus for not giving me what I wanted. I hated this pointless label of “Christian”.
